Read claims with limits

Research can help people ask better questions. It should not be stretched beyond what it can actually show.

- A broad pattern is not proof of one family's facts.
- A source may describe risk without deciding what happened in a specific home.
- Safety, abuse, fear, coercive control, trauma, and child development all need careful attention.
- Professional and official help matters when safety, health, or legal issues are involved.

What this does not prove

Keep the line clear between learning from sources and judging a private family situation.

- It does not diagnose anyone.
- It does not prove blame or intent.
- It does not replace a professional assessment.
- It does not replace emergency, legal, medical, or mental-health help.
